An International Perspective

WRITTEN BY NAHUM PRADHAN

Namaste!

My name is Nahum Vinit Pradhan. I am half Nepali and half Indian. I am currently a student in Moravian College, and am majoring in Music Therapy and minoring in Psychology. This is my Sophomore year, and I have 6 classes, 3 lessons and 3 ensembles. I'm involved with the International Club and I'm on the Rugby team. After my undergrad, I plan on going to grad school so I can get a complete degree in music therapy and begin practicing either my own clinic or with a hospital. I'm open to the possibility of going anywhere after Moravian because you never know what opportunities await you until you venture out into the world.

As an international student, leaving your home can be quite daunting. But Moravian has been nothing short of accepting, nurturing and loving. I would recommend Moravian to international students because the campus is large enough with everything that is needed for college students, but at the same time small enough to have direct access to resources. One of my favorite things about campus is how helpful and available the professors are. If you ever need help or are struggling in a class or with any situation they are always there to lend a hand. The city of Bethlehem is absolutely beautiful and one that is rich and filled with history. Quite often, I'll walk from one campus to the other to take in the scenery and clear my head when im overwhelmed with work.

Want to travel & get course credit for it? Look into a faculty-led program.

Faculty-led study abroad programs at Moravian are a great way to go abroad (even in the US) without the hassle of planning a trip. While the objective of these trips are to study a predetermined subject, immersing yourself in a new environment and culture gives you a learning experience so broad that you would have never expected to find.

Going on a faculty-led program is perfect for someone who wants to travel or is considering studying abroad for a semester, but is too nervous to do it alone or are unable to plan a trip on their own. These trips are perfect if your family may be apprehensive about letting you travel – they are led by professors who plan each day and have been to the destination before. Plus, you will be with fellow Moravian students.

If you think the cost is limiting you from this type of experience, think again! For the experience you get, these trips are certainly a bang for your buck. Most trips come with a few meals, hotel stay, daily excursions and more included in the set price. Some even include the airfare! Compare the price to what you may pay with your family, friends or on your own and you will be saving money without a doubt. Although you will have to also pay for the tuition of the course in addition to the trip (I think??), it is the same price as the cost of a half or full unit course taught at Moravian. To make it even better, scholarships are available for students going abroad even on these short-term trips!

These trips last from one week up to three weeks in almost every continent. Check out the Spring Break trips to Costa Rica, Honduras, Italy, the Czech Republic and Austria, and Oregon or the Winter Break trips to Tanzania and Disney World. If you want a longer and more in-depth experience, look into the May Term offerings in Europe, Spain and Japan.

It doesn't hurt to look into it - anything is possible!
